The World Health Organization asserts, “the concept of food security is defined as including both physical and economic access to food that meets people’s dietary needs as well as their food preferences.” The access to healthy food is something that many take for granted, yet the reality is that people in the developing and developed world are increasingly finding their food security being altered as a result of economic, environmental, social and political changes.

Please join a panel discussion composed of Bucknell faculty sharing their expert perspectives on this crucially important topic.

Jason Cons
Department of International Relations

Erin Lentz
Department of International Relations

Ben Marsh
Department of Geography

Clare Sammells
Department of Sociology & Anthropology