The Griot Institute is inviting students of all backgrounds to participate in our Storytelling Series. This initiative aims to preserve and celebrate the oral histories of Black communities by providing a platform for individuals to share their personal stories and experiences.

Series Theme:

An exploration of reproductive rights and the historical significance of Black women within the context of political, social, and cultural landscapes.

Objectives:

- Foster a deeper understanding of Black women's contributions to society.
- Promote dialogue around reproductive justice and its impact on Black communities.
- Highlight the role of storytelling in archiving Black experiences and preserving cultural heritage.

Format:

- The series will consist of a series of conversations, each led by interviewers with a focus on understanding the intersection of reproductive rights with the Black experience.
- Participants will be encouraged to share their personal experiences and the historical context of their community's struggles.
- Each conversation will be recorded and transcribed to contribute to the ongoing archiving of Black experiences.

Expected Outcomes:

- Increased awareness among students, faculty, and staff about the complexities of reproductive rights from a Black perspective.
- Enhanced collaboration between the Griot Institute and student-led organizations to support the preservation of Black history and culture.
- Greater engagement of students in the development and execution of programming related to race, gender, and identity.

Event Details:

- Information Session: Friday, October 28 from 12:00-1:00 pm in the Hildreth-Mirza Great Room
- First Conversation: November 12-13, Terrace Room, ELC, Sunday 11/13 - 2 - 3:20 pm
